Wallowing in Wonderment

One thing about living on a quaint little harbor where others come to vacation is that you end up watching people as they discover an entirely unfamiliar world. There is a 10 foot tidal range along these shores, so every six hours, 100 yards of beach is exposed, then covered with millions of gallons of seawater and all the creatures which live in it. Each time the tide goes out the children and their parents find a world has opened up on the stretch of sand invisible only moments before.

From the deck I can see them as they venture further and further out into the unknown territory. I hear gasps and clamors. Occasionally a small girl will squeal – like only a small girl can. Often it is enough to compel me off the deck and down onto the beach myself; into the unknown world of things that look, smell, and move like nothing else.

Hermit crabs are not safe from the long thin fingers of those who have never met them. Horseshoe crabs are easily nudged with a stick to see if they really are stuck together. Small fish are scooped up in the minnow net purchased at the nearby hardware store. Expired spider crabs and eel grass become the ghoulish items used when chasing your siblings around in a circle. Even the building of a sandcastle on shore can reveal stones and shells that defy everything one knows as truth.

It is here, in this seemingly outlandish and temporary world, that one is fully enveloped in what I refer to as aliveness. Each few feet of newly exposed harbor floor is filled with discovery. Each discovery is a new world. Each moment is lost entirely as the hours roll by and the shoulders of the participants turn pink from the sun's rays. Slowly, inevitably, the tide turns and the playground is covered with more and more water. No one is in a hurry to leave, looking feverishly for one more something they have never seen before.

“Above all else, I want to see things differently” ~ ~ ~ A Course In Miracles

We hear a lot these days about how much each of us, as souls venturing into the Earth playground, has forgotten. We have forgotten our vibrational essence, forgotten our powerful beingness, forgotten all the sacred rituals, our other lifetimes and even forgotten our connection to life itself. It seems as if our entire journey as lightworkers is to remember all the things we've forgotten on purpose.

Why? Where does it all lead; the hours of meditation, the not so random acts of kindness, the cellular releases and timeline regressions? What exactly is it that happens once you've imagined yourself into the diamond core crystal of your heart and then projected yourself into the grid which overlays the planet and then skipped on across to another star system to gather up some knowledge from the wise ones?

Answer: The same feeling that happens on the tidal flats – Wonderment!

Oh, there is a lot to be said for the feeling of inner peace, and an expanding sense of gratitude for all things. Most soon realize the strength of their own will only to decide that they prefer living out Divine will. Yes, there is much possibility that comes once you pass the gate of your own restrictive inhibitions. But, the first thing, and the lasting thing – that which is the foundation of everything else you come to know along the path - is Wonderment.

Wonderment is a joy to watch, and a delight to experience. It is terribly underrated in the scheme of things and it is high time we recognize the Truth so we might enjoy a sense of discovery for this magical moment we are in.

Wonderment is the impetus of creation itself. It doesn't get as much credit as a few other key words like "intention" and "attention", but that doesn't change what it is or how it works. Wonderment is what makes the world go around. It is the both the grease and the glue which fashions the expansion and harmony of all creation. It was wonderment which caused the Source of All That Is to question, "Who Am I?" And it is wonderment which has allowed all the creations, in all realms, which have become part of the answer to that eternal question.

"Be ye like the little children" is a call to wonderment. Never have the bells of possibility rung as clearly as they do this month.

September 2011 is not the month that will change the world as we know it. That month has already occurred. It is not the month when the Earth herself will be birthed anew. That has already happened also. It is not the month that we will look around and say that all the old is gone and all the new is in place. Nope, that month is still unfolding.

September 2011 is the month which provides the greatest possibility for you to choose the tone of the new vibration, and to choose in Wonderment.

Actually, you will be choosing how you want the new world to function. You will be shaping the very fabric of the next 10,000 years by the personal choices you make in the coming month. The opportunity is that great. The possibilities are that magnificent. So, the question is, "Will you choose wonderment?"

“The choice is not serious. It is meaningful. Lighten Up! Be in your joy. This is not about making time for joy. This is making a joy of all you do – even the mundane tasks. Be open to fresh, exciting discoveries and a feeling of Wonderment will fill you.”

There are many expressions of life which those of us on earth are not accustomed to seeing, and hearing. There are many realities which will become known to us in the months which lie directly ahead of us. We will have the chance to fall into fear, or attempt to control the circumstances, but we will also have the opportunity for discovery on a scale we cannot even imagine. Really, the discovery that this world was round – not flat – has nothing on the discovery of how many other dimensions exist within our world. Things are going to get really interesting, very soon.

Will you choose to create a world and express a life filled with discovery and awe? Will you loose track of time and wade into the unknown enough to be pinched by creatures that smell funny and whose names you don't know how to pronounce? Will you stare endlessly at the intricacies of something outside your norm? Will you gleefully share your discoveries with others? Will you be unafraid – of the worlds exposed by the outgoing tide, and of the incoming tide, also?

Will you consider all the options for this life, for all lifetimes, for all expressions everywhere and conclude that experience is transitory? That it is merely a means to notice the exciting rush and calm assurance of Wonderment.

For the month of September 2011 set aside all your searching for answers. Do not grasp at the teachings of others or the visions of turmoil you see across the planet. Release the need to check-in with anyone else about what is going on, or what you should be doing. Cease taking the world, and your self, so seriously.

“There is no forecast. The time is now. The prediction is reality. The Truth is yours to embrace. Be happy. Be playful. Be without guilt, worry, or regret. Be in wonderment and be swept away by the joy of endless discovery unfolding within each of you. You are the Grace of God incarnate. Bask in your sea of Love.” ~ ~ ~ I AM>Carla

This is a powerful time in the alignment of heavenly bodies throughout the galaxy. It is the perfect time to relax in the awareness –

- you have never done anything wrong,
- you cannot make a mistake, and
- you are never finished playing the game.

So, throw off your shoes and your watch. Wade with me into the unknown – just for the fun of it!

Sunburn is just evidence you are standing in the Light ~
